Even if you're not on this list, having one on your home screen can come in handy. I usually have two or three, since I rely on them for interviews and transcription. When you search "voice recorders" in an app store, it can be hard to sort through all of the choices to find one that has exactly the features you need. We've done that for you here. I put in my own recommendations, talked to my colleagues at PCMag about what they use, and researched what else is out there. These apps range from basic, easy-to-operate choices to ones with a full range of features, including AI-based transcription, that pros will appreciate. Many of the apps are free, and the rest are relatively low-cost compared with purchasing a digital recorder. One thing to note: For any apps that also handle transcription, there are privacy concerns(Opens in a new window)—so proceed with caution when recording anything that you want to remain confidential.
